

About Sandra

Sandra Samoska is a former journalist turned faith and family writer, who created the blog Outnumbered by Sandra Samoska. She is a frequent lecturer for a 400-member women's Bible Study Fellowship class in Houston, Texas. Aside from writing and delivering biblical teaching, she conducts leader training, seminars, and shepherds women in many different ages and stages. Her passion is to share with others the love, beauty, safety, and togetherness that can be found when we allow God to meet us exactly where we are – and ask Him to show us others who are in the same place. She is a graduate of Southwestern University in Georgetown, Texas, with a degree in Communication. Sandra and her husband of 16 years have the privilege of raising four amazingly unique children that span the ages of 4-13. Between them and the multiple pets they seem to collect, she's seriously Outnumbered. You can find her writing on Her View From Home, and in Focus on the Family Magazine, as well as Today Parents and Scary Mommy. Sandra is also a contributing author in the popular anthology, The Unofficial Guidebook to Surviving the Toddler Years.

